

RAISING OUR VOICE AGAINST SOCIAL EVILS

What is the most dangerous social evil that you have ever heard or ever seen?

Is it corruption? No,

Is it drug abuse? No,

Is it discrimination? Once again No

The most dangerous social evil is the moment we begin to accept them as normal.

The day corruption becomes "adjustment"...

The day injustice becomes "our fate"...

The day dishonesty becomes "smartness"...

Society never files in a single night.

It dies one compromise at a time.

But my generation has proved one thing.

We are not the generation that stays silent.

When the NEET paper leak shattered the dreams of lakhs of students, young people across the country stood together. They questioned the system. They demanded accountability. Their united voice became so powerful that it shook the corridors of power, and eventually the Union Education Minister, Dharmendra Pradhan, stepped down.

That moment taught us something far greater than politics.

The power of people is more powerful than the power of people in power

Some people laughed at today's youth.

Some even called them "cockroaches."

But they forgot something.

A single cockroach may be ignored.

Millions moving together cannot be ignored.

That is not the power of insects.

That is the power of unity.

My dear friends,

Every social evil survives by asking us one question:

"Why should you speak? It's none of your business."

And every great society is built by people who answer:

"Because it is my business."

If corruption steals one student's future...

It is my business.

If drugs destroy one young life...

It is my business.

If hatred divides one nation...

It is my business.

Because silence never protects the innocent.

Silence protects the guilty.

So I don't dream of becoming the richest person.

I dream of becoming a citizen whose voice cannot be bought, whose conscience cannot be silenced, and whose courage cannot be defeated.

I conclude with just one thought...

Social evils are not afraid of powerful governments.

They are afraid of awakened citizens.

So let us not whisper before injustice.

Let us raise our voice before social evils raise their heads.

Thank you.
